Rebuilding independence with help from the Furniture Bank.
Furniture Bank movers talk with furniture recipient.

"I knew there was a real problem when my 7-year-old daughter's teachers started to talk to me about her self-esteem," a person we recently helped said. "That was the catalyst for us to finally leave."

After nine years of mental abuse from her husband, this mother picked up her three children - ages seven, five and two - and left. Though they were sleeping on the floor for a couple of months, this mother we helped says her family was much happier to be away from the abuse.

According to the United States Department of Justice, approximately 1.3 million women and 835,000 men are physically assaulted by an intimate partner annually in the United States.

One of the Furniture Bank's core clients are individuals and families fleeing domestic violence situations. This one mother is one of many who come to the Furniture Bank when they are rebuilding their lives.

While at the Furniture Bank, this mother received beds for her children and herself, a new sofa and chair set, a dining room table and chairs, an entertainment center, and kitchen items, among other things.

"My experience at the Furniture Bank was beyond my expectations," this mother we helped said. "I was just hoping to get beds for my kids and I am so happy to receive so much more."

This one mother and her family were referred to the Furniture Bank from Partnership Against Domestic Violence, a non-profit that works to help women and children regain self-sufficiency when fleeing domestic violence situations.

This mother is slowly rebuilding her life after leaving her husband; although her biggest hurdle is physically seeing the changes. She says that after years of being under his control, it is challenging to regain her self-approval. With her new house full of furniture, she finally feels like her family is making a step in the right direction.
